The signals which are not in this line, three more points have been determined on the quay wall at the Pacific level by which the azimuthal lines of the signals of Fugate are passing, the values of which being respectively $30^{\circ} 40' 00''$ and 50° . All these three points are marked on the wall by vertical cracks of whose point having, at the side the figures corresponding their value. The first is at 100 metres west of the pillar of observation mentioned further on, and at about 50 metres west of the Public Works building, the second near the quay along of the square General Gálvez, and the third near the military hospital quay. The azimuthal line which passes by this first point is not exactly at 30° but at $30^{\circ} 40' 00''$, but as the quay bends towards south after this point it was not possible to get the exact bearing. As however the difference is a little more than $2'$ it has no influence in the determination of the direction, on board.

The pillar of observation lies also in the quay of the marginal access, at 100 metres west of the Public Works building, and their co-ordinates are:—

Lat. N. $33^{\circ} 36' 00''$ Long. E. Gr. $75^{\circ} 48' 56''$, 58. They were delated by graduated glasses on the angular intersection of first class.

Close to the bearing of the centre of the Foghorn clump is $45^{\circ} 00' 45''$, 55 E. and the mark of Kusan on the same hill by $75^{\circ} 48' 40''$, 55. This mark can be seen only with a good telescope. It is formed by a red having in top two crossed steel plates, one white and the other red, and it stands on the place of a graduated point of the first class, having also been marked by the green lead scale for determination of the magnetic declination. As it is not visible by naked eye, it cannot be applied for the determination of the magnetic variation on board. The pillar is made of stone of cylindrical shape 1.14 metres high and observations of the sun can be made there in the morning at any time of the year, but in the evening, not always.

On this pillar both geodetical and rectangular co-ordinates are engraved, and their height above the hydrographical zero, which is 1,792 metres, and above the mean level 2,812m.

FOOT OF DAC

THE PLANTS OF THE BARRIOS

Two beams have been placed, the direction of which gives protection against the wind of the feet in the rough demanding the port by south or south west, and wishing to enter by the channel formed by the shoal and by the road bank going respectively to the west.

In the channel the depth found is not below 3 fathoms.

The beams are placed at about 125 metres apart one from the other on the bank of Gupile, a little to the west of the monument of Capt. Ward which is easily distinguished by its quivering due from having on top a greenish blue gasolinier.

The beams consist of vertical poles having on top white rectangular flags of wood by 3 beams with intervals.

The port shoal is dangerous and the rock is only visible at low water. As the rock bank is of sand and covered with water weeds, the vessels may pass close to it having the main eye, but the vessel should never pass in the west of the line of the beams.
